Instagram Post

A Comparison

Washington compared to the leading state in price to income ratio South Dakota

There are many differences that can be seen between the leading state and Washington. Washington has experienced large spikes overtime and a much higher rate of increase in child care costs over recent years. In contrast South Dakota has seen a steady but slower rate of increase. This highlights the opportunity for Washington to create proactive solutions to stabalize the costs and to support Washington Families.

My Commitments:

Making Child Care More Affordable

I will advocate for policies that will cap child care expenses as a percentage of household income and support subsidies for middle and low income families.

Support Child Care Providers

I will push to increase funding for child care centers to ensure higher competitive wages for employees, better training, and improved facilities, making it possible for every child to have access to quality care.

Tax Credits for Families

I will push to introduce and expand on child care tax credits for working parents that will assist in offsetting the financial burden.

Join me in this fight for Washington families by following me on social media, attending a town hall, or sharing your personal stories of social media with the hashtag #BiedigerForWA.

Together we will build a future where every family has the support they need to succeed.

Washington families deserve better! As your next Governor I will fight for affordable child care so every parent can focus on their future without breaking the bank. Right now Washington is ranked last in the nation for childcare affordability with prices continuing to rise quickly, but together we can change that. By investing in sustainable solutions I will actively work to make child care more affordable and accessible for all. It is time to build a stronger future for our families together! #BiedigerForWA #AffordableChildCare #WAGov2028